Atabout 2.50 yesterday afternoon the fire bells pealed forth an alarm, however, and on inquiry it was found that a fire was raging in Gap street. On arrival there, althe same time indiscreet officials should be for such acts as are to be joined in by a though no time had been lost on the way, the restrained from recklessly granting permits number of persons shall be issued to one per- large block which comprises the Po Lok Theatre and the buildings attached was found to be in flames in almost every part. From some cause. we hear it was joss pidgin, the outbreak occurred in an amali's room attached to one of the shops on the Gap-street front of the block. In that dry building, where there is an immense amount of wooden structure, the flames ranalong with incredible rapidity, and before any help could be btained the fire was beyond all hope of checking in time to save the building. The first engine on the ground was a little Chinese manual from an establishment near the Harbour Office, which was quickly followed by the powerful manual of the Nam Pak Hong. No. 3 Government steamer was down almost as soon as the will consider it desirable to retain such a use- Section 11 is a formal one, reserving the latter, and it was in action in a remarkably short space of time, being quickly followed by the that no permit shall be required for any other "Government steamers, the Hongkong Fire Insurance Company's steamer, and the Silk Guild's manual. Besides the heavy supply of water brought to bear by these engines there was a strong pressure upon the hydrants, which were largely made use of and water was soon being poured upon the burning mass from all sides. Acting Superintendent J S. Brewer, and Assistant Superintendents Grey and Wagner were early on the scene, directing the operations of the Government Fire Brigade, while Mr. A Coxon had a strong and energetic body of red jackets under his command. There was really not a great deal that could be done, as it was evident from the first that the Theatre block must be destroyed, and it being well isolated it was not a difficult matter to keep it from spreading—merely to cool the fronts of the houses on the opposite sides of the streets around. it. Gan-street was a wide division in front, there was a wide street also between it and the St. Stephen's Church premises, and at the back | ment. also there was a wide division intervening between it and the Tung Wah Hospital building. The narrowest division was the street on the east side, but there was a good wall on that side as well as the others, and the danger of the fire arreading beyond the Theatre block was not great with so much assistance at hand. The heat across Gap-street was very tonse at one time, every shop in the block Camelot was taken in hand at Aberdeen on the being brought to bear, however, soon began to tell round the sides of the block, and by about A case of highway robbery occurred at Kow- four o'clock there was a considerable diminution in the heat and the flames in the front.

THIBET AND ITS TRADE.

A well-informed correspondent sends us the Mr. Colman Macaulay, an Indian official of much experience on the northern frontier, has velled to the Thibetan frontier, and there held communication with the Lama, or ruler of the country. The lotters written by the latter were satisfactory so far as they went. Their subanxious to trade directly with the Indian merchants, and to permit the latter to reside in the country for that purpose; but they were, the Lama said, subject to China, and could take no and ran in with it. He was collared by Brooks lieving that Mr. Macanlay's mission to obtain the consent of the Chinese will be attended with complete success, owing to many circumstances to which it is needless to refer at present, beyond observing that the principal one is the bilief of the Chinese that England has no political sims would be a wise step for the Chinese themselves. Thibet has long been the region of mystery romance. Only one English traveller, Manning in 1811, has ever reached Lhava, the canital. For twenty-five years past English travellers have endeavoured to reach the country from Chine, but they were stopped sooner or later by the Chinese. Captain Blakiston commenced in 1860, but was forced to retreat just as be was about to leave the Yangtszeut Pingshan; Cooper, in 1869, made his wonderful journey "in pigtaill and petticonts," and actually reached Bathang and Atenze, in Eastern Thibet, but, after enduring great hardships, he too was forced to return, and a few years later Captain Gill fuiled in the attempt described in his "River of the Golden Sand." But of all attempts to open trade with Thibet the most interesting was the first, undertaken by Bogle, an official in the service of the East India Company, in 1774 hy orders of Warren Hastings. No one who reads Mr. Markham's book on the journeys of Bogle and Manning can doubt for a moment that had Hastings remained in India, and not been comnelled to come home to most Burke's charges rgainst him, he would have succeeded in establishing trade across the frontiers on a firm and auduring basis more than a hundred years ago; and when we read the instructions which he gave to Bogla the minutes and memoranda which he drew up with his own hand for his emissary's guidance, we cannot sufficiently admire the breadth of view, the mastery of details, the care with which every contingency is provided for, and the wide reading on the unknown and mysterious Thibet, displayed by the great Governor-General. But, very briefly, the circumstances were these. The ruler of Bhutan, a state lying between Thibet and India, had been punished by Hastings for his incursions on the Company's territory. After the expedition in 1774. Hastings, at Calcutta; received a letter from the Teshu Lama, interceding for the delinquent. which is as dignified and at the same time pathetic a document as it is possible to conceive. The Lama freely acknowledged that the Rajah of Bhutan richly deserved punishment for the ravages and plunder which he had committed in Bengal and Behar, because he was rude, ignorant: and avaricious. But Bhatan was dependent on Thibet, and if further hostilities were carried on the Thibetans would feel annoyed. Moreover, as the punishment had already been ample the Lama requested Hastings now to leave the Bhutanese alone, for they could not offend again. "As to my part," continued the Lama, "I am but a Fakir, and it is the .custom of my sect, with the reserv in our hands, to pray for the welfare of mankind, and for the peace and happiness of the inhabitants of this country; and I do now, with my head uncovered, entreat that you may cease all hostilities against the Deb in future." He acknowledged that if the English did not like to grant his request he could not compel them, for he had no troops, being only a poor priest. Hastings was not the man to miss an opportunity like this, and he immediately despatched Bogle to acquaint the Arriving at Teshu Lumbo, a palace of the Lama, near Shigatsze, not far from the Thibetan frontier. Bogle met with a reception of the most friendly and satisfactory character. The Lama and the Thibetans were willing to trade. but (in 1774 as in 1884) they were subject to China, and must get her consent first. That calculated to asmoy or alarm any person, or plays in England for the approval of the turned from the Abbrdeen docks, where she was looking like the entrance to a huge blazing - Inspector Bremner deposed to re-arresting the possible that the made by the Long. He was he said posal then made by the Lame. He was, he said, for his arrest. Mr. Wetten was instructed for I going soon after on one of his periodical visits to Peking, where he had no doubt, of obtaining the consent of the Emperor Kien Lung, when he explained to him his own desire and that of his people to trade, and also the handsome conduct of the English in the Bhutan affair. He suggested therefore that Bogle should go by sea to Canton, and there wait for the passport to Peking, which the Lama promised to obtain for him. The journey took place in 1779, and the Lama had obtained the Emperor's consent to the trade, when he goes taken ill of small-pox and died. Bogle died soon after at Calcutta. Had the meeting between this trusted servant of Hustings and a man of the onlightened character of Kien Lung taken place through the friendly offices of the Lama, our relations with China might have been advanced nearly a century, and the consequences to India and China would have been incalculable. Nearly ten years after Bogle's mission, Hastings despatched a Captain Turner to the new Lama an infant of eighteen months old, into whose body the spirit of his predecessor had according to Thibstan tradition, passed; and the child received the new Envoy with such marks of infantile satisfaction that his parent said to recognized the English, his Kwok Kee, of No. 8, Chinese-street, was sum- friends of the previous state, and promised, as soon as he could speak, to teach him the name of grand object on which he had bestowed so much thought" was abandoned. No English official, Butlin said that on Sunday he engaged a man as Mr. Clements Markham points out, has since to go to the defendant's shop and buy him a held personal influence with the rulers of Thibet; bottle of whiskey and another of brandy. He the very history of the Hastings negotiation was and P. C. 34 saw the man go into the shop forgotten, and it is only by a series of accidents Lord Dufferin took up the strings which fell Hitherto trade has made its way there might even now have been a profitable trade with Thibet. There is said to be a large from Chiua, leather and horses from Mongolia, Ho Chung; of No. 205, Shankiwan, was sum- tea from Szechuon, broadcloth and other English moned by Inspector Swanston on a similar and Indian manufactures from Nepaul.
